No. 69. Lone Reel

THE making of syrup is an interesting industry. The Lone Star State has a number of cane mills where the finest syrup is brewed. It is a long process from "cane to can," but the final product justifies the long hours of patient labor.

The ancient rites of the Iroquois Indians still flourish among what is left of that tribe now. The "big boss" or medicine man believe that the wearing of grotesque masks will cure disease and drive away the evil spirits, and if grotesqueness has anything to do with it, the happy effect should be obtained, for none can compare with these mask.

There is a collection of "laughographs" embracing some really funny notes which school teachers receive from parents and a "Cinema Luke" animated during the course of which Luke takes a hand at boxing, but succeeds only as a Marathon runner.
